ABSTRACT

The purpose of the Center for Philosophic Exchange was to bring together members of the academic community and the world of public affairs for deliberative exchange and discussion of problems in order to further the purpose of increasing public understanding and appreciation of the roles that philosophy and the humanities play in matters of ultimate public concern. To this end, five conferences on philosophy and related topics were conducted during 1969-70, and television tapes and printed proceedings produced. This report discusses the speakers and topics of these conferences and the plans for 1971. (AF)

Program for the Center for Philosophic Exchange A Report to the

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

November 30, 1970

The 1969-1970 program for the Center for Philosophic Exchange was supported by the State University of New York through the College at Brockport, New York, the Xerox Corporation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Rochester Telephone Corporation, the Lincoln Rochester Trust Company, Duryea Motors, Inc., and the University Inn of Brockport, in addition to the National Endowment for the Humanities. The grant provided by the National Endowment totaled $10,000, of which $5,000 were matching funds raised by the Center. The Xerox Corporation donated $1,000, and the Faculty Student Association acted as the collection agency for $4,000 received from other donors as follows: The Rockefeller Foundation, $2,500; Rochester Telephone Corporation, $500; the Lincoln Rochester Trust Company, $500; Duryea Motors, Inc., $250; the University Inn of Brockport, $250.

The Center produced five conferences during the course of the academic year which brought philosophers and other academicians to the Brockport campus for the reading of papers, discussions with students and faculty members, and the making of celevision tapes.

The major papers and responses were published as part of the Annual Proceedings of the Center, two copies of which are forwarded herewith. Five one-hour television tapes were made as part of the five conferences, in which the major participants engaged in unrehearsed discussion of major issues arising from the papers and related discussions which were a part of the conferences.

Significant in the program was the inclusion of "practitioners" from the related disciplines, depending upon the topic of concern. This process was a part of the International Philosophy Year format, which was employed at all fourteen conferences conducted by the International Philosophy Year program during the 1967-1968 academic year on the Brockport campus. Men of public affairs, academicians from areas other than philosophy, and other interested persons were active participants in that program, both formally and informally. The rationale for such participation assumes that philosophy, in order to have an appropriate impact on the humanities and related disciplines, must submit itself to the discipline of criticism from persons whose primary concern lies in areas outside of the philosophical enterprise. That is to say, academicians and responsible persons related to the problems and issues with which philosophy deals must have a suitable voice in the consideration of theoretical philosophical estimates and recommendations concerning the analysis and the future direction proposed by those who concern themselves with the basic issues involved.

At the first conference of the academic year, on Philosophy and Education, Dr. Fred Harcieroad, Professor of Education at lowa University and President of the American College Testing Program, drew upon his long experience as a college president at Hayward, California in participating in discussions with philosophers

Henry David Aiken of Brandeis University and Sidney Hook of New York University. In the conference on the Scientific Enterprise and Social Conscience, the distinguished biologist and physician Dr. Robert Morison was a major participant in discussions with philosophers Abraham Edel of City University of New York and Max Black of Cornell University.

For the conference on Philosophy and Literature, the major participants responding to The Coinage of Man: King Lear and Camus' Stranger by philosopher Morris Weitz of Brandeis University included Francis Sparshott of Toronto University, both a philosopher and well-known poet, and Marshall Cohen of Rockefeller University, a professional philosopher who has served as drama critic for the Partisan Review. Lawyer Graham Hughes, Professor of Law at New York University Law School, was a major participant at the session on Philosophy and Politics, and responded to the chief paper delivered. This approach to philosophic exchange between philosopher and practitioner also greatly enhanced the effectiveness and eventual use of the television tapes, in terms of their availability for instruction.

The conferences were as follows:

Philosophy and Education: February 20 - 21, 1970

Philosophy and Science: March 5 - 6, 1970

Philosophy and Literature: April 23 - 24, 1970

Philosophy and Law: May 7 - 8, 1970

Philosophy and Mind: May 14 - 15, 1970

The Center for Philosophic Exchange is continuing its program during the 1970-1971 academic year with support from the Rockefeller Foundation. A total of six conferences, similar in format to those reported on in this document, will be held (three each semester). The Center hopes to attract additional supporters for its continuing program, and is attempting to find permanent . financial support within the budgetary structure of State University of New York. The Division of Educational Communications at Central Office of State University has arranged for the creation of instructional tapes which draw upon the television archives created by the International Philosophy Year program of 1967-1968 and the continuing program of the Center for Philosophic Exchange. The first instructional tape will be made in February, 1971, with the participation of Professor Brand Blanshard, Sterling Professor Emeritus of Yale University, who will join the Project Director in a television format which draws upon excerpts from available television tapes, on the topic of "The Philosophy of Mind." The eventual use of the television tapes may well become one of the major contributions of the Center's program, not only in ways which serve the intellectual community broadly, but in the detailed instruction which is a part of the program of higher education throughout State University of New York and other universities to which the tapes are made available in the future.

The Center makes the Annual Proceedings available to interested persons within the financial limits possible.

BRIEF SUMMARY STATEMENT

The Center for Philosophic Exchange, State University College, Brockport, New York, received a grant (EO-26-70-3735) from the National Endowment for the Humanities for the period June 1, 1969 through May 31, 1970. The period of the grant later was extended to August 31, 1970, to enable completion of the project. The project title was "Program for the Center for Philosophic Exchange". The sum provided was a Gifts and Matching grant of $10,000, with the Center required to find donors for half that amount. Gifts totaling $5,000 were arranged for by the Center, as follows: the Xerox Corporation, $1,000; the Rockefeller Foundation, $2,500; the Lincoln Rochester Trust Company, $500; the Rochester Telephone Corporation, $500; Duryea Motors, Inc., $250; the University Inn of Brockport, $250. The Student Faculty Association acted as a collecting agency for the last four donors mentioned above.

The grant enabled the Center to continue the work of the International Philosophy Year of 1967-1968 by providing funds to support five conferences on philosophy and related topics during 1969-1970. Television tapes and printed proceedings of the five conferences were produced by the Center for distribution. The basic purpose of the program was to bring together members of the academic community and the world of public affairs for deliberative exchange and discussion of problems in order to further the purpose of increasing public understanding and appreciation of the roles that philosophy and the humanities play in matters of ultimate public concern. Each of the five conferences resulted in a major paper, plus two written responses from philosophers, other academicians, or practitioners. Five one-hour television tapes were made which recorded the unrehearsed discussion and exchange among major participants on issues of major concern related to the topic at hand. The printed proceedings (containing fifteen articles) and the five television tapes are available for non-profit instructional use, within limits imposed by the financial resources of the Center.

The five conferences were conducted as described below:

Philosophy and Education: February 20-21, 1970 Henry David Aiken, Sidney Hook, Fred Harcleroad

Philosophy and Science: March 5-6, 1970 Abraham Edel, Max Black, Robert Morison

Philosophy and Literature: April 23-24, 1970 Morris Weitz, S. Marshall Cohen, F. E. Sparshott

Philosophy and Law: May 7-8, 1970 S. Marshall Cohen, Kai Nielsen, Graham Hughes

Philosophy and Mind: May 14-15, 1970 A. J. Ayer, Justus Hartnack, Richard Taylor
